real life.

A view that is possible only through a camera. And then on film.

To create these shots you have to achieve the impossible-to shoot when all your experience tells you it's impossible.
Your ability to do this is very much related to your understanding of how a particular stock will act in a particular situation.

And you not only have to understand it but you have to keep up with the improvements. Over the last 60 years these improvements have given us the potential to make truly great pictures.

With all the features I've shot, I've calculated that 554 kilometres of film has sone before my eye.

And the majority of that film has been 35 mm Eastman Color Negative film. I think that says something for my attitude to the stock."

Octavio Cortazar visited Sydney, in January, where two of his documentaries. Por primera vez (For the First Time) and Sobre un primer combats (On a First Combat), and his first feature. El brigadista (The Literacy Teacher), were shown as part of the Cuban Film Week The enormous popularity of Cortozor's films this most recent was seen by one million Cubans in the first month of release) testifies to his understanding of the Cuban national character.

In this interview by Martha Ansara, Cortazar expresses forcibly the distinctive Cuban spirit of militancy for which the nation and its filmmaking is famous.

Using the Louma Crane

Television commercial production has provided the basis of training and limithood for most of the Australian feature film industry sechnicians and artists. It is also a source of innovative and complex webpolary to service the need for startline images that communicate oxickly and with impact. Ian Roker is a Melbourne directors noted for his feature work as director of photography on "The Desil's Plasground" and "The Chant of Jimmie Blacksmith", and for a number of awardwinning commercials. Recently, he used the Louma crane for the first time in Australia, in the production of commercials for the launch of the Dutsun Bluebird
